Free the Files: Help ProPublica Unlock Political Ad Spending

By Al Shaw, Jeremy B. Merrill and Amanda Zamora, ProPublica. Launched Sept. 27, 2012. Data updated Aug. 18, 2014

Outside groups are spending millions of dollars hoping to influence the presidential and congressional campaigns. But much of it is hard to track down. Detailed information about spending by super PACs and "dark money" nonprofits with secret donors are locked in documents filed at TV stations across the country. You can help us uncover this spending by reviewing documents in some of the biggest battleground markets. About this project »

MARK THE POTHOLES

Winter in New England generates serious potholes. Do you have a similar pothole on your route that consistently rattles your axle, or keeps you swerving? If so, mark it here, and we'll chart the potholes around the region. You can report a pothole found in the city of Boston by calling the mayor's 24-hour hot line at (617) 635-4500.

ShareThis Yahoo! Buzz Email

HOW TO MARK A POTHOLE

1. Navigate to your pothole on the map below. Use the controls in the upper left corner to move the map around the window or zoom in and out. When you've found the right spot, click on it.
2. Fill out the form that pops up. Be sure to include as many details as you can. If you have a photo, upload it. Click "Save".
3. You can add information to an existing pothole report by clicking on its marker.

APIs: Wiring Things Together

The screenshot displays the 'pipes' application interface for a workflow named 'Ego feed'. The interface includes a sidebar with various source and operator categories, a main workspace with a grid background, and a top navigation bar with buttons for 'Layout', 'Expand All', 'Collapse All', 'Back to My Pipes', 'New', 'Save', 'Save a copy', and 'Properties...'. The workflow consists of three main components connected by blue lines:

- Fetch Feed: A component with a 'URL' section containing three entries:
  - `http://news.google.com/news?num`
  - `http://feeds.technorati.com/search`
  - `http://feeds.delicious.com/v2/rss/tz`
- Filter: A component with a 'Block' dropdown set to 'any' and a 'Rules' section containing one rule:
  - Rule: `item.description` Contains `Steve`
- Pipe Output: The final output component of the workflow.

The 'Fetch Feed' component is connected to the 'Filter' component, which is then connected to the 'Pipe Output' component. The 'Debugger' status at the bottom right is set to 'none'.

Net neutrality debate: Far from over

By TONY ROMM | 2/6/15 12:09 PM EST

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's much-anticipated net neutrality rules are barreling toward a final vote later this month — but they're almost guaranteed to become immediately mired in legal challenges.

Telecom giants are deeply uneasy about Wheeler's plan to regulate broadband like a utility, and they're widely expected to drag the chairman to court. That could ensnare the FCC in a bruising, multiyear fight that outlasts not only Wheeler but the man who pushed him to take a stronger approach, President Barack Obama.

It's a familiar pattern: The agency's previous efforts to enforce net neutrality have sparked lengthy legal battles, as the FCC and federal judges have struggled to apply pre-Internet era statutes to one of the most contentious issues of the digital era.

Supporters argue the policy landscape has shifted dramatically in favor of tough regulation, and they're confident they'll persevere. But agency veterans know all too well the issue is destined to head to court — and could eventually land back in the lap of an FCC that looks very different than it does today.

Telecom giants "know there's one place in the world where no one is watching YouTube, there's only one group where ideology prevails and the actual Internet experience is irrelevant," said Reed Hundt, a former Democratic FCC chairman during the Clinton administration. "And that's the [federal] judges on the D.C. circuit."

Something is puzzling on Facebook.

Early last year, soon after Facebook instituted a feature that let people subscribe to others' feeds without being friends, I quickly amassed a healthy "subscriber" list of about 25,000 people.

The way Facebook highlights or hides information on its site raises ethical questions.

"Facebook is not only promoting my links on news feeds when I pay for them, but also possibly suppressing the ones I do not pay for."

WASHINGTON — Few presidential candidates enjoyed better news coverage than Barack Obama in 2008. He promised unprecedented “openness in government” and a new era of transparency.

He appears to have fallen far short of the promise. This administration has prosecuted more whistle-blowers for leaks and gone after more journalists than any of its predecessors.

In a report last year, Leonard Downie Jr., the former executive editor of The Washington Post, said the administration’s efforts to crack down on information seeping to journalists were “the most aggressive” since President Richard Nixon was in office.

The issue was crystallized anew last week when the Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal from the New York Times reporter James Risen, who has been ordered to testify in the trial of Jeffrey Sterling, a former Central Intelligence Agency official. Mr. Sterling is charged with giving Mr. Risen classified information about an attempt to
